Overview:

The first issue of the paper was published and covered for 27-28 July 1995. There was no clear information explained its circulation volume, but according to the list posted on the website of the Ministry of Information (February, 2012) its circulation is 3,000 copies. The list also shows that Mr. Heng Samoeun is the current publisher of the paper.

According to those early issues of the paper held by Yale University Library, the paper provided coverage mainly for local news. Primarily, it reported and praised the senior government officials who were mainly members of the FUNCINPEC Party and especially the first Prime Minister, Prince Norodom Ranaridh and also the president of the party. The paper also criticized some senior government officials who were inactive in taking proper actions or measures to improve and develop the country. It is interesting to point out that the paper was strongly critical of Samdech Soen San and his son, as well as the Buddhist Liberal Democratic Party (BLDP). Besides, the paper seemed to have also a strong voice against Vietnam and the Vietnamese government through its cartoons and a commentary section. The same as other typical local papers, Khmer Angkor News also provided readers with an education and edutainment piece of history, novel and poem.

It is not very clear on political affiliation of the paper, but according to the tone of its early issues, the paper looked as if it allied to FUNCINPEC and HE Eang Moly, but was strongly critical of Samdech Soen San, Sam Rainsy, and Vietnam. However, this could not be confirmed.
