Overview:

The paper actually began in 1994, but the earliest issue held by Yale University Library was number 23 printed for September 19-20, 1995. There was no information found about its circulation volume as well as an update during the research. According to the publication itself shows that the paper was sold at 400 Riel per copy. It is also worthwhile mentioning that the paper is not listed by the Ministry of Information on its list of media organization posted on the ministry homepage (February, 2012). This certainly indicate that the paper is very likely that the paper stopped its operation, but when exactly is unknown. It importantly to point out that, legally all papers must register with and obtained its license before starting publishing and they are normally listed on the ministry list.

According to the available issues, the paper was heavily flooded with local political news related to the activities of the senior government officials that some were critical while some other were applause. Besides, crimes and violence that was also narrowly reported, paper also provided a section on literary section with two novel fictions.

There was no reliable source confirming the political stand of the paper, but it looks like a pro-government paper. However, it was not a clear cut if it was on the FUNCINPEC or CPP side. Not surprisingly, the paper was very critical of the opposition voice.
